

play with your food

We got our hands on ingenious art supplies that double as edible treats. So go on ahead and let your kids indulge their sweet tooth—while they paint, doodle and scribble. —Jennifer Chen

DABADOODLE PAINTS

After her son tried to eat toxic paint, Rhonda James created gelatin-based versions he could safely slather on paper and lick off his fingers. They double as glue but taste better, thanks to flavors like marshmallow and chocolate. ($5, childrensartcafe.com)

SANDY CANDY

Remember those sand-art booths at the county fair? This sugary spin on the original comes in squeeze bottles. Kids can mix and match 52 sweet-and-sour flavors. Some even have candy glitter and crunchy sprinkles. ($30 for a party pack, niftycandy.com)

FOODOODLER MARKERS

These food-coloring markers make it easy to jazz up a hamburger bun or scribble a silly face on an apple—perfect for hungry Picassos in the making. Don't worry, Mom: The "ink" is completely edible. ($6 for 5, foodoodler.com)

CANDY BLOX

Little builders can sculpt endless skyscrapers, castles and other architectural creations with these tart candies. They look like Legos, and stack up just like them, too! ($2.50, nostalgiccandy.com)

CLEAN SWEEP

The next time you feel stressed out, reach for your mop! (We know—bear with us.) Homeology's new line of all-natural floor, glass and all-purpose cleaners ($11 each, beegreencleanblue.com) contains fragrant essential oils, like peppermint and orange, that soothe you while wiping out dirt and germs. They're biodegradable, safe to breathe and shipped in recycled materials—so your conscience will be as clean as your home!

SPEAK UP!

Q What type of drink do you serve at parties?

COCKTAILS	5%
WINE AND BEER	16%
A COMBO	59%
NONALCOHOLIC	20%

web JOIN THE HEATED DEBATE! Visit us at rachaelraymag.com to answer our latest polls. Watch for results in an upcoming issue.